

AIRCRAFT NOW PEACE-TIME INDUSTRY

Firms No Longer Dependent on War Department Help

By JOHN COLLINS

Seventeen years ago Orville Wright sold his first airplane to the United States Government. Last year the American aircraft industry turned out products to the value of $12,277,000. The manufacture of aircraft now is passing from the stage in which it has been dependent upon the government to the status of an independent industry.

According to a report by the Daniel Guggenheim Fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics, the present activity in the construction of aircraft should be considered as a wholly peace-time proposition.

In this respect the progress of the past twelve years is illuminating. In 1914 the total value of all aircraft products of the United States was only $789,872. By 1919, under the stimulus of war, the value of aircraft produced had mounted to $14,373,000.

With the inevitable deflation of the post-war period, aircraft production shrunk in two years to little more than $6,650,000. The years that followed 1921 have seen a recovery, however, which has been quite as striking as the deflation.

Whereas production fell in two years to considerably less than half of what it had been at the close of the war, another two years saw the low figure of 1921 almost doubled.

Output of aircraft in 1923 was nearly $13,000,000. Production on this scale has continued and the fact that it exceeded $12,250,000 last year indicates that the industry has achieved a fair degree of stability.

Establishment of the United States Air Mail Service and a growing interest in aviation for other civil uses have been factors in this recent expansion. It appears that the industry will soon be free of its old dependence upon War and Navy Department orders.

wealthy man and a married woman who, it is believed, were in De Russey's Lane, which passes the farm, the night of the murders. It is possible that one or both may have had an opportunity to see the murders while carrying on their illicit lovemaking. The woman is said to be the wife of a man regarded as well-to-do.

Supt. Simpson refused to divulge the names of the couple, nor did he indicate what would be the attitude of the authorities toward the woman sought. He confined his remarks to saying that the man is "a relative of one of the biggest insurance men in New Jersey."

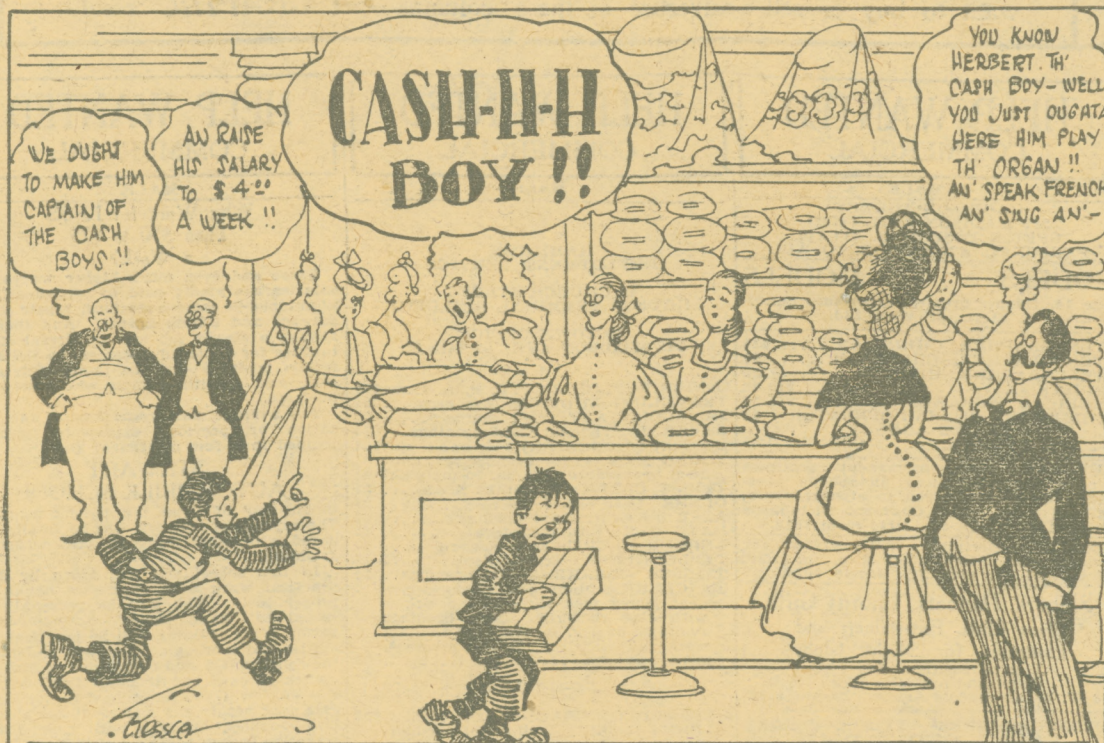

In the meantime the investigators are giving considerable attention to Mike Sulics, powerful Austrian, whose whereabouts were uncovered last night by a reporter for The GRAPHIC.

"Pig Sticker" Heard Nothing

Sulics, known in the community as a "pig sticker," was for some time caretaker of the Phillips farm. When it was purchased by Samuel Levin, New Brunswick real estate dealer, he lost his job.

"I was on the farm at 9 o'clock the night of the murders," Sulics told The GRAPHIC. "I saw no-and then. Still, thoughts are more fascinating than actions, after all. Thoughts give birth to action, and are, in turn, the offspring of the deeds we do.

Natacha was reading my diary—now and then a smile would cross her face—I knew she knew what I had been thinking when I wrote such and such a thing. Women have intimate knowledge of the thoughts of men. They read us like so many volumes, each bound in our different way. We are like children to women—to women who body around, nor did I notice anything unusual."

There had been a report that the "pig sticker," so named because he was employed by farmers to kill pigs, found a window of the farmhouse open and one of the rooms indicating that it recently had been occupied.

Free Accused Girl Wife on Parole

BAYONNE, N. J., Sept. 14.—Mrs. Anne Lukinowich, 18, who was arrested Saturday on a charge of attempted homicide preferred by her husband, was released on parole today by Acting Recorder Edward Griffin for a further hearing tomorrow after her husband, Macary, said he was not sure she had tried to poison him.

Since the girl has been in the jail here, her husband has visited her several times with food and clothing.

love us. They indulge us, reprimand us, and always, always see through us.

"Have I omitted anything?" I asked Natacha. "Left anything out, you think?"

"From the amount of scribbling you have done since we left, Rudy," Natacha smiled, "it would seem to me impossible for you to have omitted anything. You may have left out a thought or so, but"—Natacha indicated with a wave of the hand that that seemed to her to be unlikely—"but," she repeated, "you have left out any mention of meeting Andre Daven in Paris. Don't you think you ought to put him in the next time you write in your diary? He may figure in later events, you know, and then you will wish that you had recorded his—inception, shall I say?"

I told Natacha that she was right. Odd, that I should have omitted one of the most interesting events of our Paris stay.

While we were in Paris, among the interviewers who came to see me was a young man named Andre Daven.

Perfect Type

The minute he came into the room I spotted him as a "type." I am constantly on the lookout for types, because I know them to be very important to the screen, to each individual picture.

Young Daven is an extraordinarily good looking chap of my own country, with amazing eyes, fine physique and general bearing out of the ordinary and of a compelling attraction. I have arranged to have him come to America and take part in "Monsieur Beaucaire," my next big picture.

Natacha says that this is one trait of mine, quite out of the common in men. Almost any man can "spot" a beautiful woman, or an extraordinary type of woman. Unique. Individual. Unusual.

But very few men, so Natacha tells me, can recognize the unusual or attractive in another man. Perhaps it is because we men are not looking for attractiveness in other men. Men take other men a great deal for granted, I find; hail-fellow-well-met, and if that element is there the personal appearance does not count for a very great deal. But I am different in that respect.

Strike Situation Better in Britain

The mining difficulty in England appears to be working itself out, according to a report of the Department of Commerce. With about 40,000 miners back at work, approximately 200,000 tons of British coal are being produced weekly, while foreign coal is now coming into the country probably at the rate of slightly more than 1,000,000 tons per week.

Coal imports since the cessation of production aggregate about 6,000,000 tons. About 80 per cent. of it has been taken by the railways, which probably now have supplies sufficient for six months operations.

long been interested in casting pictures, in which men figure almost as prominently as women. I have watched other men rise in screen fame—Barthelmess, Novarro, Glenn Hunter, chaps like that—and, of course, have given some thought to the part type plays in a man's screen success.

For myself, for instance, I know that my foreign blood showing in my face and bearing has a great deal to do with the kind reception I had by the American public. The Anglo-Saxon has a distinct "flair" for the Latin. It is the call of strangeness. The allure of the alien. The appeal of the unknown. The pique of interest in what we are not ourselves.

Pondering over all of this has made me acute in the observation of my fellow men as well as my fellow women. Perhaps judging so many contests has been part of my training. I would make a fine casting director, if I were not an actor—and if I did not have a wife with even acuter and finer capabilities than mine in this particular field.

The market had a strong tone today. Gains up to 5 points were achieved by leading issues. All groups took part in the advance. Trading was brisk.

Call money renewed at 5 per cent.

Steel and General Motors resumed the leadership they relinquished some days ago. The former pushed its way through 147 for a gain of more than 5. U. S. Steel ascended through 148 for a gain of more than a point. Du Pont touched 309 for a gain of 6.

The feature once more was Warner Picture A. Broadcasting of the fact that the stock is callable at a figure less than 20 failed to curb the advance of this issue. Shortly after noon it had reached 68 for a gain of nearly 5.

Famous Players pushed its way into the limelight around noon by reaching above 116 for a gain of more than 2 points. Postum Cereal nibbled at 110 for a gain of nearly 4.
